

Through ACE, you can interact with a broad range of communication and information technology professionals – from writers, educators, video producers and graphic designers to database programmers and Web developers.

ACE also enables you to network with more specialized peer groups from around the world through Special Interest Groups (SIGs). These groups provide a community of common interests and expertise, and an additional way to sharpen your skills and grow professionally.

SIG members communicate via electronic discussions and newsletters, as well as in person during meetings and workshops. Members share ideas and experiences, and also help plan program content for ACE's annual international meetings.

As a benefit of regular membership, you may join as many SIGs as you wish – all free of charge. Join one or several to best suit your professional development needs.

SIG leaders will find the SIG Leader Handbook, and the fall SIG report and the spring SIG report to be helpful resources in the performance of their volunteer duties.

Join a SIG

To join a SIG, click on "Forums" in the left navigation, and join as many as you wish.

- Academic Programs
- Distance Education & Instructional Design
- Diversity
- Electronic Media and Photography
- Information Technology
- International
- Leadership & Management
- Marketing
- Media Relations
- Publishing and Graphic Design
- Research

- Social Media
- Writing

Dissemination of Agricultural Communications Research

The Dissemination of Agricultural Communications Research survey is still open and the opportunity still exists to win one of two $100 gift cards. To enter to win the gift cards, members should complete the survey, then send a separate entry email to Judith White or post to that effect in the Research SIG forum.